Rhe Lorraine and Her Own Company.

The management of the Barre opera house is to be congratulated in securing Miss Rhe Lorraine and her own company for a special engagement of one week, commencing July 4th. Miss Lorraine will long be remembered for her superb work when in Barre a year ago. This year Miss Lorraine comes to us with a repertoire of plays of more than usual merit and has provided herself with a company particularly strong. No expense has been spared in staging her productions, special attention being given to costumes versatile and artistic to a degree. Miss Lorraine has been extremely careful in the selection of her plays, choosing those particularly adapted to her histrionic temperament with the result that the theatre loving public may be assured of a veritable treat at each performance.

The vaudeville portion is made a feature and between acts specialties will be introduced which will be of the best and the audience may rest assured that there will not be a dull moment from the rise to fall of curtain.

Notwithstanding the unusual excellence of Miss Lorraine's productions the prices will remain as usual, 10, 20 and 30c.

WHY BOYS LEAVE THE FARM

One Missouri Editor Says It Is For Woman's Favor.

The fact that two out of every three farmer boys in the University of Missouri take other courses than the agricultural ostensibly for the purpose of enabling them to leave the farm has caused the university authorities to wonder why the boys leave the farm, says a Columbia dispatch to the Kansas City Star. The agricultural course at the university is one in which the most efforts are put forth to secure students, but the boys from the farm fight shy of it, preferring the courses in medicine, law or engineering, and many of them take the academic course. Missouri editors were asked to explain the reason the boys leave the farm, and a number of interesting replies have been received.

L. P. Strum, editor of the Saline County Index, says he "was reared on a farm and would still like to get up at 5 and harness the horses, eat while the horses do and hurry to the field amid the song of birds, the perfume of flowers and the sparkle of the dew, there to turn loamy soil about the growing crop."

"Pride has driven many a boy from the farm. The roughness of his hands and the tan on his cheeks, acquired by hard work in the sunshine, make him feel at a disadvantage with his city cousin, whom he chances to meet in the parlor of some favorite lady friend Sunday evening. The air of superiority exhibited by the soft handed, fair cheeked city chap makes the farmer boy ill at ease, and he goes home at night sick at heart and tired of the farm. He imagines his country life favors the city chap and would prefer some other life than the farm. Like Maud Muller, she is not content with her lot, and she spurns the love of the noble farmer boy because of what she thinks is his humble calling. The result is the boy becomes disgusted with the farm. Even at college or the university the young women seldom turn their smiles and approval toward the farmer boy in preference to the law student, the civil engineer or medical student. What influence could be more potent?"

C. M. Strong, editor of the Columbia Daily Tribune, thinks the explanation lies in the belief among farmers that book learning is not good for farmers. "Education," said Mr. Strong, "long has meant the study of books that have nothing to do with agriculture. For various reasons the results of this have been such that persons have concluded that book learning means more often the spoiling of a farmer than the making of one."

Putting on Style in Arizona.

Every symptom points to a tendency to spread on style in Tombstone, Ariz. Among other instances in this direction the boys bought a pair of beautiful barber pole suspenders and presented them to the amiable dispenser who shoves the amber extract of cheerfulness over the mahogany of the Parlor saloon, says the Tombstone Prospector. He promptly donned the innovation, but claimed that he felt like he had a fence rail on each shoulder. Then, when they became overburdensome, he would unbutton them and permit them to dangle in front, but he has finally got them down low enough to go to church in. Several old timers, conspicuously court attendants from the other end of the county, have fallen into the habit of wearing boiled shirts, and it looks as if sky blue overalls might be discarded as a full dress costume. Getting "powerful tony" in town nowadays.

Cape to Cairo Railway.

The British South Africa company has received information that the Cape to Cairo railroad has been brought up to Victoria falls, the line now stretching a distance of over 1,000 miles from Cape Town, says the London Chronicle. The sections of the huge single span bridge which is to carry the railway across the falls are now on their way out from England, and it is expected that the structure will be completed before the end of this year. Meanwhile the line will be taken 100 miles farther north, to Kalamo, the headquarters of the administration of northwest Rhodesia.
